and supportive services. During the pandemic recovery, we are especially grateful for the expertise, services, and emergency grants. When needed, we provide hundreds of families with housing resources, advocacy, and assistance with food.

What do you envision for the organization in the next forty years?

In 40 years, NAC has become leading the way with our approach to ending poverty and the support we give to ensure families succeed. Kids need to grow up in homes or their own. When we learned of 100 medically complex children living in hospitals, we knew we had to do something. Kids need to grow up in homes or their own. When we learned of 100 medically complex children living in hospitals, we knew we had to do something.

Director, Andrea Elliott-Aufe, spoke of the challenges she faces many of the families she works with at New Artemis for special needs and mental health services for New York City's most vulnerable children and families. Sámanta understands the challenges we face many of the families she works with at New Artemis for special needs and mental health services for New York City's most vulnerable children and families.

Samantha understands the challenges we face many of the families she works with at New Artemis for special needs and mental health services for New York City's most vulnerable children and families. Her mother and father had to raise and care for two relatives after the deaths of their parents. This experience helped drive her passion for helping children and families.

We are especially grateful for the expertise, services, and emergency grants. When needed, we provide hundreds of families with housing resources, advocacy, and assistance with food.

What do you envision for the organization in the next forty years?

In 40 years, NAC has become leading the way with our approach to ending poverty and the support we give to ensure families succeed. Kids need to grow up in homes or their own. When we learned of 100 medically complex children living in hospitals, we knew we had to do something.